"Help, help!" a tiny voice cried in distress one bright day near Bertie Bird's home.

Bertie hopped from his nest and twisted his inquisitive head from right to left.

"I hear you calling, but I can't see you," he chirped excitedly.

"Help!" the faint cry came again. Bertie darted among the trees in Apple Tree Lane, searching for the hidden owner of the pleading voice.

"Well, this certainly is a mystery," he twittered. "I just can't find that voice."

"Caw! Caw! What's up, Bertie?" Blackie the crow called as he flew past. "I'm with you if you're after a free meal. Say, you really look serious today."

Bertie explained the problem and together they cocked their heads to listen.

"I think it's coming from down in that garden someplace," Blackie suggested.

They flew down to search among the flowers, but they could not find the voice.

"Hey," Pinky Crossbill called from a nearby tree. "What are you two up to?"

When Pinky learned what they had been doing, he joined in the search, too.

"Help!" the little voice called again, seeming to come from the very air.

"Well, if this isn't the ding-dongingest mystery I've ever heard of," Pinky said disgustedly. "We can hear it just as plain as day, but all we can see are flowers."

"Oh, no!" Blackie warned. "That's not all we can see. Look over there."

"A cat," Bertie trilled with alarm as the trio darted to a nearby tree.

"You don't suppose that the cat is making a noise like a bird, do you?" Bertie asked.

"I don't think so," Pinky peeped. "The noise doesn't seem to come from that way."

"Help!" the tiny hidden voice called again, sounding weaker this time.

"Well," Blackie declared, "I may be a bully in some ways, but I'm not going to leave anyone at the mercy of an old cat."

"That's the stuff," Bertie cheered. "You're bigger than us, Blackie, so you dive down at that cat and keep him busy while Pinky and I continue to look around through these flowers."

"Okay, fellows," Blackie snickered. "There is nothing I like more than a good fight." Down he swooped, straight at the startled cat's head. "Caw, caw," he scolded.

The surprised cat scooted under a bush and, at the same time, Bertie and Pinky flew to the flower bed and began to search.

"They're all alike except this one," Bertie declared, pausing to look a little closer at a particular flower.

"Hey," he said with surprise. "This sure is a funny-looking flower. Why . . . there's a hummingbird stuck inside."

"I thought you'd never find me," the hummingbird buzzed. "When I dove into this flower, my wings got stuck, and I wasn't able to back out!"

"Just a second; Pinky and I will hop up and down on the stalk and shake you loose," Bertie replied. "Get set to take off in a hurry, because there's a cat nearby."

A moment later the hummingbird was free, and the four birds flew to safety.

"Thanks a lot, fellows," the hummingbird said gratefully.

"Oh, that's all right," Bertie twittered. "You provided us with a nice little mystery to solve, there for awhile."

"I'll say," Pinky chirped slyly. "It was a hum-dinger!"

"Fresh up" Freddie says:

"RIGHT NOW, you're probably asking yourself–

What does a dynamite loader drink to quench his thirst?"

"I'm a dynamite loader. All day I play catch with cases of explosives. I hardly ever miss!"

"Of course, accidents will happen! I try not to go to pieces. I try to keep cool. But for some reason I feel hot. Something must be burning. It's my throat!"

"So I pull myself together and have a chilled 7-Up. Seven-Up extinguishes the fire in my throat—and I'm my old cool self. Nothing does it like 7-Up!"

7UP

Don't play with fire! When you have that burning in your mouth or throat, put it out with the real thirst-quencher. As "Fresh up" Freddie always says: " 'Fresh up' with 7-Up!"

ee Freddie on TV! Watch Zorro* . . . from Walt Disney Studios every week on ABC-TV
